The year of 2020 marks the 10th anniversary of the China Section at the Agricultural & Applied Economics Association! As China's premier journal in agricultural economics, China Agricultural Economic Review (CAER, SSCI indexed with an impact factor > 1) is inviting contributions to a Special Issue on "Agriculture, the Rural Economy and China's Growth in the 21st Century: Celebrating the 10th Anniversary of the AAEA's China Section."

Proposed themes for the Special Issue include:

- A decade of the AAEA China Section: Past, Present and Future;
- Agribusiness, e-commerce, food safety and the supply chain;
- Poverty reduction and changing rural livelihoods;
- Human capital (education, health, nutrition, training, etc.): past successes, future challenges;
- Climate change and the environment;
- Input markets (land, labor, capital, etc.): the path of evolution and the role of reforms;
- Output markets, subsidies, trade and food security;
- Public infrastructure investments and the rural economy's growth and transition;
- Technological progress, information and communication technology (ICT), R&D investment and agricultural productivity; and
- Research on the recent COVID-19 outbreak and its impact on the rural economy: empirical findings and policy messages.

For those interested in participating, we will follow the following procedure:

- Please submit your full paper between May 1 and June 15, 2020, using our online submission system at: <http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/caer>. Please follow the journal submission guidelines. In your cover letter, you must indicate that the submission is for this Special Issue.
- Papers will undergo a standard (but expedited) review process. You will receive an initial editorial decision of rejection or accept/revise/resubmit with detailed comments within one month. In the cases that are positive, revised drafts will be due by August 15, 2020.
- We aim to publish the special issue in the first half of 2021.

Please forward this message to other scholars in the field. Welcome all!!!
